Song of Autumn.

Autumn Wishes.—Matilda Boug
List—list to the winds as they're flitting along,
Like the waves of the sea, or the notes of a song;
Now gently—now wildly—now sinking to rest,
Like a weasome babe, on its mother's breast.
Oh! sad are the days, when the leaf and dead,
Promises the beautiful summer fled.

The leaves are drooping;—the buds are dead;—
The earth is bare, and fair to view;
We hear them no more, till on bright glistening wing,
They hasten to welcome the breath of spring.
Oh fair is the land where the snows never come;
But dearest to me is my own Northern home.

Autumn Wishes.—The Autumn Wishes sing
Thus youth, and its pleasures, a passing away;
Like a tale that is told, or a bright summer's day.
Soon, soon must we leave each fondly spott'd;
And the places that know us shall in knwo us not;
Oh, then live the swan when she sinks to her rest,
May the song we sing last, be the sweetest and best.
